The law is too important to leave to politicians

Earlier this month, Justices Ian Binnie and Louise Charron, both from Ontario, announced their intention to retire from the Supreme Court of Canada at the end of the current session of the court. How their successors will be chosen is an as-yet unanswered question.

DND to cut 2,100 jobs, plan shows Report also calls for 5% reduction of contractors per year for three years

The Defence Department will cut 2,100 of its public service positions over the next three years with more "adjustments" to follow, the Citizen has learned.

The cuts will be done through attrition, and some public servants will also find themselves being transferred within the department, according to leaked Defence Department documents.

Canada gets failing grade for lax enforcement of anti-bribery laws

Canada has again been singled out for failing to enforce anti-bribery rules abroad by an international report that points the finger at Prime Minister Stephen Harper's lack of commitment.

"Canada is the only G7 country in the little or no enforcement category, and has been in this category since the first edition of this report in 2005," Transparency International said Tuesday.

A historic plan

Penalties for Organized Crime Act: Mandatory minimum sentences for drug crimes.

Anyone caught growing as few as five marijuana plants for the purpose of trafficking would be jailed for at least six months, according to the latest version of the bill. Anyone caught growing more than 500 plants would be jailed at least two years.

PS cuts may go beyond attrition

Treasury Board president Tony Clement won't rule out axing entire programs if they're no longer effective

Vowing that "failure is not an option," incoming Treasury Board president Tony Clement says he is committed to reducing the size of government and says he can't take public service job cuts off the table.

Clement, on his first full day in his new cabinet job, restated the Harper Conservatives' campaign promise to cut costs mainly through attrition, but won't rule out axing entire programs if they're no longer effective.

Plus de juges à la Cour du Québec

Le ministre de la Justice et procureur général du Québec, Jean-Marc Fournier, a annoncé une série de mesures pour améliorer le fonctionnement du système judiciaire.

Il souhaite notamment faire passer le nombre de juges à la Cour du Québec de 270 à 290. Cette modification législative à la Loi sur les tribunaux judiciaires restaurerait les 20 postes abolis en 1997.

Une deuxième autorité indépendante nommée pour examiner les modifications apportées à la Loi sur la Défense nationale

Le processus d'examen indépendant permettra de s'assurer que le système de justice militaire demeure juste et qu'il continue d'évoluer au même rythme que le droit tout en répondant aux besoins uniques des Forces canadiennes lorsqu'il s'agit de maintenir l'efficacité opérationnelle. L'examen portera également sur le processus d'examen des plaintes concernant la police militaire, ainsi que sur la procédure de règlement des griefs des Forces canadiennes.
